Subject of Review: From 2004 to 2014, the value of U.S. dairy product exports more than quadrupled, and the United States became the world's third largest dairy product exporter. This was a significant change for an industry previously focused on domestic rather than international demand. As incomes increased in developing countries, demand for dairy products increased. As the United States has become more of a global dairy market player, the U.S. dairy market has been challenged with greater variability in demand and prices. The United States, as both a top producer and consumer, has a pivotal role to play, but will compete with other large dairy producers such as New Zealand, the European Union, and Australia, to increase market share in the future. This report examines the implications of U.S. dairy export trends on domestic and international dairy markets.

Purpose of Review: The purpose of the review is to ensure the high-quality of the economic analysis, transparent explanation of methods, objective interpretation of results, and effective communication to the intended audience.
