Subject of Review:
Local food sales have increased in the 21st century as consumer demand has grown. Local food sales directly to consumers (DTC) (for example, through farmers markets, on-farm stores, pick-your-own) may assist entering and beginning farmers—who generally have lower rates of business survival than more established farms—by helping them to remain in farming. Marketing channels for local foods have extended beyond DTC channels to include grocery stores, restaurants, schools, wholesalers, and food hubs that may also provide opportunities for small and beginning farmers. This report, based on a national survey of local food producers, evaluates the characteristics, marketing practices, and financial performance of entering, beginning, and experienced farmers.

Purpose of Review:
The purpose of the review is to ensure the high-quality of the economic analysis, transparent explanation of methods, objective interpretation of results, and effective communication to the intended audience.
